2012 Leadership 500

VOL. 29 NO. 10

LEADERSHIP DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM RANKING SUPPLEMENT

OCTOBER 2012

by Ken Shelton

FOR OUR 2012 Leadership 500 ranking, we again connected with about 1,000 organizations known for developing leaders and selected over 500 to feature in seven categories: Large Organizations, Small/ Midsize, Universities, Nonprofits, Government/Military, Consultants/Trainers/Coaches, and Consulting Groups. We received about 100 updates and original entries to last year's list and tried to verify current managers and directors in these organizations.

Again this year, we expanded the ranking—as the quantity and quality of top leadership development programs continue to increase—from 500 to about 600. And again we included the names of the program directors, since recognizing the company for excellence in leadership development without recognizing the program director is like recognizing a university for excellence in their football program without recognizing the coach, or recognizing a film without recognizing its director. In fact, I find that the quality of the LD program is directly related to the quality of the current program leadership—usually a team of two or more people responsible for the design, delivery and impact of the LD program.

Rankings are based on seven criteria: 1. Vision/mission. Are these statements linked to business strategy and outcomes, and meaningful to participants? 2. Design, content, and curriculum. How well designed is the program model? How credible is the content? How relevant is the curriculum? How customized is the program? 3. Involve-ment and participation.

How broad is the involvement and how deep the participation? 4. Measurement and accountability. What ROI measures are made and reported and to what degree is accountability for performance and results part of the program? 5. Presenters, presentations, and delivery. What are the qualifications of the presenters, how effective are their presentations, and how is the program delivered? 6. Take-home value. What do participants take away and apply to improve themselves, their families, teams, and volunteer work? 7. Outreach. What is the impact of the program on all stakeholders? Does the program and its participants benefit a broader community?

Since this Leadership 500 ranking is too long to include in my Editor's Note, I attach it as a four-page Special Supplement to the October LE magazine. LE
